CELEBRATING NEW PAVILIONS

AT FORT MASON
CAPITAL CAMPAIGN

The installation of large glass doors at the entrances to Piers 2 and 3 in mid-January marked the final step in the transformation of the piers into the Herbst and Festival Pavilions, and completed the initial phase of renovations made possible by the At-Fort-Mason Capital Campaign.

To celebrate this $2.5 million facelift, the Fort Mason Foundation Board of Directors and the Capital Campaign Committee hosted a preview party on the evening of January 28 in the Herbst Pavilion, Pier 2. With entertainment and exhibits presented by Fort Mason Center resident groups, a photographic display of the piers undergoing renovation, and the opportunity to inspect the very early stages of construction of Cowell Theater (in the north end of Pier 2), it was a delightful evening for the more than 200 supporters and clients of Fort Mason who attended.

But the true star of the evening was the Herbst Pavilion itself, demonstrating the charm that can be achieved in these spaces, different architecturally from any major events facility in San Francisco. Although able to accommodate up to 3000 people, imaginative decoration and lighting created an inviting, comfortable atmosphere in the Pavilion for a smaller gathering.

"You walk into the Pavilion's natural light, from clerestory windows," commented Marc Kasky, Fort Mason's Executive Director, "and without any artificial lighting or set-up, it is absolutely beautiful." The event on the 28th showed off the Pavilion's beauty at night as well.

Brian O'Neill, General Superintendent of the Golden Gate National Recreation Area, who has watched the transformation unfold, provided further perspective. "This is a significant testimony to what can be achieved in a creative public-private partnership such as the one we have with the Fort Mason Foundation. The renovation of these historic piers could only have been accomplished through the efforts of an energetic, community-based nonprofit organization such as the Fort Mason Foundation."

The Herbst Pavilion, Pier 2, offers an attractive space for special events.

What impact has this transformation had for those who use the Pavilions to present large-scale public and private events? Alan Davis, Fort Mason's Director of Sales, is responsible for scheduling use of the Pavilions. He reports that the number of days booked for 1988 is already 50% greater than for the previous year, "and we are only four months into our fiscal year." According to Davis, events producers are especially happy with the sparkling, fresh ambiance and the fact that the Pavilions are easily adapted to different uses.

Darlene Darata, Account Executive for FM Productions, has supervised numerous corporate events for large audiences at Fort Mason. She describes the Pavilions as "a clean palette from which anything can be created." She finds that the new interiors allow her to work unrestricted by design limitations, citing the high ceilings and bright, freshly-painted surfaces.

"You get a lot of punch for your lighting dollar," says Darata. She was pleased to be able to use the preview party to show that a few well-placed lights can create a gracious atmosphere. "The new lighting systems are easy to use and provide a full range of intensities to enhance any decorative scheme."

Other events producers attending the party praised the distinctive framework structures for the versatility they offer the designer. The ample new bathrooms and the catering preparation area also caught the attention of those who value comfort and service to the public.

"We are happy to have the wonderful resources provided by the Herbst and Festival Pavilions to add to the city's other excellent convention facilities. They increase what we have to offer to organizations considering San Francisco as a convention site," according to John Marks, the new Executive Director of the San Francisco Convention and Visitors Bureau.

Fort Mason Center offers, in the Herbst and Festival Pavilions, facilities in which creativity can flourish. The people of San Francisco and the Bay Area have become accustomed to fine events here, and now Fort Mason Center can provide a setting worthy of these events.

FIGHTING FOR RECOVERY

STEPS is a nine-week course, developed by The Cancer Support & Education Center, for people with AIDS, ARC, or who are HIV antibody positive. It is not a substitute for medical care, but complements it, and helps clients to become full participants in their health, and active partners with their physicians.

This unique program adapts and builds upon methods used successfully by hundreds of people in facing cancer. The Cancer Support and Education Center is an internationally renowned organization for helping people to mobilize their will to live, become better fighters, and learn from their illness. A recent outcome study of the Center's cancer program showed highly significant improvement in coping and quality of life for people with advanced stages of disease. Studies of long-term AIDS survivors are consistent with those of long-term cancer survivors. The common denominator associated with a better medical outcome seems to be "profound changes in lifestyle and behavior."

STEPS is offered in a nine-week format, one day per week. It is not just another support group. Each enrollee is strongly encouraged to bring a "support person," who may be a partner, family member or friend, as a co-participant. Each group is likely to consist of ten to twelve new enrollees and their support people, while the staff will usually include a program leader, consultants, and several program assistants. The program includes an initial medical intake interview to ensure that enrollees are physically and emotionally capable of participation, and to help them understand issues related to medical treatment. A weekly professional massage and individual nutritional/exercise consultation also play an important part in the program.

The core of the STEPS program is the fifty-four hours of group work and training. The group work combines both relatively structured activities as well as less structured group discussions for sharing of feelings, problems, or concerns. The emphasis in all activities is focused upon what the participants can do to improve their own life situation. Among the topics and skills dealt with in the group work are mental imagery and relaxation techniques; coping effectively with emotions; coping with symptoms of illness and treatment side effects; goal setting; communication skills; exploring early life decisions and life scripts; learning about secondary gains of illness; exploring beliefs about death and dying; understanding family dynamics; developing an internal guidance system; and Radix sessions (deep bodywork based on Reichian and Bio-energetic techniques) for emotional release.

The STEPS perspective is that illness can be a teacher, and people can take an active stance toward improving quality of life and optimal health, which may include fighting for recovery. The next program meets from 8am to 4pm on nine consecutive Mondays, from March 14 through May 9 at the Fort Mason Conference Center in Building A. The fee is $1,850 for the entire course. For more information, call 327-6166. (For other AIDS-related meetings at Fort Mason Center this month, see daily listings section under March 17 and 19.)

WILDLIFE AND WILD RIVERS

Two of the Bay Area's leading conservation organizations will hold their Fifth Annual Spring Auction in Fort Mason Center's Herbst Pavilion, Pier 2, on March 24 to help support their efforts to preserve and protect California's rivers and wildlife.

Friends of the River led the successful fight last year to gain federal Wild and Scenic status for the Kings, Kern and Merced rivers, and is currently working for protection of the American River. The Wildlife Conservancy's goals include preservation of two of the state's most magnificent animals, the California mountain lion and the black bear. The Conservancy helped extend the 15-year trophy hunting ban on the California mountain lion, an endangered species. All proceeds from the auction benefit the ongoing efforts of both nonprofit groups.

The event, which draws more than 400 people each year, features a spectacular range of items, including artwork, elegant dinners and weekend getaways, kayaks and canoes, trips to New Zealand and Baja, fine wine and books, and tickets for rafting trips, theater and ballet performances and Grateful Dead concerts, all of which have been donated for the auction.

The evening begins at 5:30 with live jazz, hors d'oeuvres, a hosted bar, and a silent auction. The live bidding begins at 6:30, with guest auctioneers Superior Court Judges Bill Newsom and Daniel Weinstein and California Canoe & Kayak owner Keith Miller. Admission is $20 per person, $35 for couples. Tickets can be purchased at the door, or through the Friends of the River office at Fort Mason Center. For information, call Elizabeth Whipple or Karen Williams at 771-0400.
